Vaccines

The American Journal of Managed Care is planning a special focus on vaccines for publication later this year. We are issuing a Call for Papers for research that examines the societal benefit, safety, and accessibility to vaccines within our healthcare system. Areas of particular interest include:

- the role of health plans, employers, and other health systems in pandemic preparedness and vaccine availability
- analysis of the impact of health policies on immunization rates
- investigation of pricing and coverage decisions for vaccines
- examination of the financial and logistical barriers to access to vaccinations
- cost analyses (direct + indirect) of successful immunization programs at large employers and health plans

All submissions will undergo our customary rigorous peer-review process. Final decisions regarding ultimate acceptance and publication rest solely with the editors. Papers submitted before September 15, 2009, will have the best chance for consideration for this special collection.

Please submit all manuscripts through our online submission system at <http://mc.manuscriptcentral.com/ajmc>. If you have questions or wish to speak to an editor, please call (609) 716-7777.
